

Practice Advisory¹

JUDICIAL REVIEW OF “DISCRETIONARY” RELIEF AFTER PATEL v. GARLAND

Updated July 18, 2022

On May 16, 2022, the Supreme Court in Patel v. Garland, No. 20-979, 142 S. Ct. 1614 (2022), held that federal courts of appeals are barred from reviewing factual findings underlying the denial of the following forms of relief from removal: cancellation of removal, voluntary departure, adjustment of status, and waivers sought pursuant to 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h) and (i). In so holding, the Court interpreted the judicial review bar found at 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i). This practice advisory summarizes the decision, explains its impact, and offers some paths forward for practitioners.

Notably, the decision only applies to review of purely factual claims relating to the enumerated forms of relief, where the claims are raised to a court of appeals through a petition for review of an order of removal.

1. What was the issue before the Supreme Court?

The specific issue identified by the Court was whether 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) “precludes judicial review of factual findings that underlie a denial of relief” from removal.²

The statute at 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B) provides:

(B) Denials of discretionary relief

Notwithstanding any other provision of law (statutory or nonstatutory), including section 2241 of title 28, or any other habeas corpus provision, and sections 1361 and 1651 of such title, and except as provided in subparagraph (D), and regardless of whether the judgment, decision, or action is made in removal proceedings, no court shall have jurisdiction to review—

- (i) any judgment regarding the granting of relief under section 1182(h), 1182(i), 1229b, 1229c, or 1255 of this title, or

¹ Copyright (c) 2022, National Immigration Litigation Alliance. This practice advisory was written by Shuting Chen, Mary Kenney, and Chris Rickerd. It is intended for lawyers and is not a substitute for independent legal advice supplied by a lawyer familiar with a client’s case.

Questions regarding this practice advisory should be directed to NILA at info@immigrationlitigation.org.

² Patel, 142 S. Ct. at 1618.

- (ii) any other decision or action of the Attorney General or the Secretary of Homeland Security the authority for which is specified under this subchapter to be in the discretion of the Attorney General or the Secretary of Homeland Security, other than the granting of relief under section 1158(a) of this title.

Patel focuses entirely on subsection (a)(2)(B)(i), which precludes circuit courts from reviewing “any judgment regarding the granting of relief” under five provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA):

- 8 U.S.C. § 1182(h) (waiver of certain criminal offenses, known as a § 212(h) waiver)
- 8 U.S.C. § 1182(i) (waiver for fraud or willful misrepresentation of a material fact, known as a § 212(i) waiver)
- 8 U.S.C. § 1229b (cancellation of removal)
- 8 U.S.C. § 1229c (voluntary departure)
- 8 U.S.C. § 1255 (adjustment of status)

Notably excluded from this list are asylum, withholding of removal, and protection under the Convention Against Torture (CAT). Thus, Patel does not impact challenges to factual determinations relating to the denial of those forms of protection raised in a petition for review.³

2. What are the facts and procedural history of Patel?

Mr. Patel entered the United States without inspection in the 1990s.⁴ Years later, the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) commenced removal proceedings by serving him with a Notice to Appear (NTA) charging him as being present in the United States without admission or parole under 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(6)(A)(i).⁵ Mr. Patel admitted the charge and applied for adjustment of status as relief from removal. The Immigration Judge (IJ), in a decision affirmed by a panel majority of the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA), denied the application, finding that he was inadmissible—and therefore ineligible for adjustment under 8 U.S.C. § 1255(a)—because he had misrepresented in a driver’s license application that he was a U.S. citizen.⁶ Notably, he was not charged in his NTA as having falsely claimed U.S. citizenship. The IJ’s decision rested on a factual finding that Mr. Patel was not credible in asserting that he mistakenly checked the wrong box on the driver’s license application and never intended to misrepresent his citizenship.⁷

³ The plain language of both subsections of § 1252(a)(2)(B) clearly excludes asylum from their reach. See also Nasrallah v. Barr, 140 S. Ct. 1683, 1694 (2020) (“[8 U.S.C.] §§ 1252(a)(2)(C) and (D) do not preclude judicial review of a noncitizen’s factual challenges to a CAT order.”). Note, however, that Nasrallah does not address judicial review over factual challenges to statutory withholding of removal orders under 8 U.S.C. § 1231(b)(2)(A).

⁴ Patel, 142 S. Ct. at 1619.

⁵ Id. at 1620.

⁶ Id.

⁷ Id.

On petition for review to the Eleventh Circuit, Mr. Patel argued that “any reasonable judge would have been ‘compelled to conclude’ that his testimony was credible and that he had made an honest mistake on the form.”⁸ Mr. Patel and the government agreed that 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) did not bar review of this factual determination, though they disagreed as to the scope of § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) in other contexts.⁹ But the Eleventh Circuit, sitting en banc, held 9-5 that it did not have jurisdiction to review any factual findings underlying the agency’s denial of adjustment of status.

The court held that § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) stripped it of jurisdiction to review all agency determinations related to adjustment of status, as this was one of the enumerated categories of discretionary relief listed in § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i). Moreover, the court concluded that the later-enacted 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(D), which restores jurisdiction over legal and constitutional claims raised in a petition for review,¹⁰ was inapplicable because it did not specify review of factual issues.¹¹ In so holding, the court significantly curtailed the scope of judicial review and broke from published decisions issued by a majority of other circuits.¹² The Supreme Court subsequently granted certiorari to resolve the jurisdictional question.

2. What did the parties argue before the Supreme Court?

Mr. Patel argued that the adjudication of adjustment of status applications contained two distinct steps.¹³ First, the agency would determine if a noncitizen is statutorily eligible for relief. Second, the agency would determine if an eligible noncitizen should be granted the relief as a matter of discretion. Mr. Patel argued that the bar to review in § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) applied only to the second step of the adjudication, and thus, courts had jurisdiction to review all claims—whether factual, legal, or constitutional—arising from step one of the inquiry. The government made a

⁸ Id.

⁹ Patel v. U.S. Att’y Gen., 971 F.3d 1258, 1272 (11th Cir. 2020) (en banc).

¹⁰ 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(D) states:

(D) Judicial review of certain legal claims

Nothing in subparagraph (B) or (C), or in any other provision of this chapter (other than this section) which limits or eliminates judicial review, shall be construed as precluding review of constitutional claims or questions of law raised upon a petition for review filed with an appropriate court of appeals in accordance with this section.

¹¹ Patel, 971 F.3d at 1275.

¹² Id. at 1277 n.22; see also Patel, 142 S. Ct. at 1621 n.1. Note that the Supreme Court stated that the Seventh Circuit “appear[s] to interpret” the statute similarly to the Eleventh Circuit in Cevilla v. Gonzales, 446 F.3d 658, 660-61 (7th Cir. 2006). Id. However, the Seventh Circuit appears to have reached a different conclusion in, inter alia, Iddir v. INS, 301 F.3d 492, 497 (7th Cir. 2002) (“[W]e find section 1252(a)(2)(B)(i), by its use of the terms ‘judgment’ and ‘decision or action’, only bars review of actual discretionary decisions to grant or deny relief under the enumerated sections, including section 1255.”).

¹³ Brief for Petitioners at 18, Patel, 142 S. Ct. 1614 (No. 20-979).

similar, but analytically distinct, argument that courts could review step one of the inquiry unless the eligibility determination had been made discretionary by statute.¹⁴ Mr. Patel and the government agreed that his case raised a nondiscretionary factual question as to statutory eligibility and, therefore, that federal courts had jurisdiction to consider the claim.

Because Mr. Patel and the government agreed that there was jurisdiction, the Supreme Court appointed an amicus curiae¹⁵ to brief and argue in support of the Eleventh Circuit’s decision. Amicus contended that 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) precluded judicial review of all issues related to adjustment of status applications (i.e., steps one and two), including nondiscretionary eligibility issues such as the factual one in Mr. Patel’s case. Amicus further argued that 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(D) did not restore review of factual issues—only legal and constitutional issues.¹⁶ Because Mr. Patel’s only claim was factual, amicus argued that the Eleventh Circuit properly held that it lacked jurisdiction to review the petition.

3. What did the Supreme Court hold in Patel?

The Supreme Court agreed with the position of amicus and affirmed the Eleventh Circuit’s holding that federal courts lack jurisdiction to review factual determinations arising from applications for relief enumerated in 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i).

Importantly, the Court’s holding only applies to the five enumerated forms of discretionary relief when denied in removal proceedings. The Court specifically declined to address the issue of § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i)’s impact on jurisdiction in district court actions challenging U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) denials of affirmative applications or petitions for an immigration benefit.

The Patel dissent disagreed with the majority, stating that “[s]ubparagraph (B)(i) only deprives courts of jurisdiction to review the Attorney General’s step-two discretionary decision to grant or deny relief, not the BIA’s step-one judgments regarding whether an individual is eligible to be considered for such relief.”¹⁷ Significantly, the dissent questioned the majority’s conclusory determination that Mr. Patel’s petition concerned a factual, rather than legal, question.¹⁸

4. What was the Court’s rationale?

The decision interpreted 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i), surrounding statutory language, and precedent. First, the Court read the phrase “any judgment regarding the granting of relief” in § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) broadly, reasoning that “judgment” extends beyond those decisions that are ¹⁴ Brief for the Respondent Supporting Petitioners at 15, Patel, 142 S. Ct. 1614 (No. 20-979); see also Transcript of Oral Argument at 55, Patel, 142 S. Ct. 1614 (No. 20-979).

¹⁵ While a number of amicus briefs were submitted in the case, including one by NILA, “amicus” herein refers to Court-appointed counsel arguing in defense of the Eleventh Circuit’s decision.

¹⁶ Brief for Court-Appointed Amicus Curiae in Support of the Judgment Below at 20-21, Patel, 142 S. Ct. 1614 (No. 20-979).

¹⁷ Patel, 142 S. Ct. at 1631 (Gorsuch, J., dissenting).

¹⁸ Id. at 1635 n.3.

discretionary, and that the words “any” and “regarding” expanded the reach of the word “judgment.”¹⁹

Second, the Court found that Congress’s enactment of § 1252(a)(2)(D) to preserve judicial review of only legal and constitutional claims is consistent with a reading of § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) that precludes review of factual questions.²⁰ The Court reasoned that Congress could have included judicial review of factual determinations when it enacted § 1252(a)(2)(D) but did not.

Third, the Court determined that its decision was consistent with its prior holdings in Guerrero-Lasprilla v. Barr, 140 S. Ct. 1062 (2020), and Nasrallah v. Barr, 140 S. Ct. 1683 (2020). Specifically, in Guerrero-Lasprilla, the Court held that § 1252(a)(2)(D)’s restoration of judicial review over legal questions included review of mixed questions of law and fact. The Patel Court reasoned that, had it interpreted § 1252(a)(2)(D) as including pure questions of fact, it would have so held in Guerrero-Lasprilla.²¹ The Court also pointed out that it had stated in Nasrallah that “a noncitizen ‘may not bring a factual challenge to orders denying discretionary relief, including . . . adjustment of status.’”²²

The Court rejected other arguments raised by Mr. Patel and the government. First, both parties argued that the Eleventh Circuit’s decision erroneously foreclosed judicial review of the denial of Mr. Patel’s adjustment application based on a false claim to U.S. citizenship, but that, if DHS had charged him as being removable for having made a false claim, that removability question would have been reviewable. The majority found this argument unconvincing, noting that the granting of relief is a “matter of grace” not a “matter of right,” and thus review of a denial of relief could reasonably be restricted even where exactly the same factual challenge to removability would have remained reviewable.²³

Second, the Court rejected the argument that, under the Eleventh Circuit’s decision, federal courts would not have jurisdiction to review denials of discretionary relief that occurred outside removal proceedings, i.e., denials of affirmative applications for § 212(i) and § 212(h) waivers and adjustment of status.²⁴ The majority concluded that “foreclosing judicial review unless and until removal proceedings are initiated would be consistent with Congress’ choice to reduce procedural protections in the context of discretionary relief.”²⁵ In any event, the majority reasoned, “policy concerns cannot trump the best interpretations of the statutory text.”²⁶

Finally, the Court found that the text and context of § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) clearly precluded judicial review of factual determinations in the discretionary relief context. Thus, the Court concluded that it did not need to resort to the presumption of judicial reviewability, as argued by Mr. Patel

¹⁹ Id. at 1622.

²⁰ Id. at 1623.

²¹ Id.

²² Id. (quoting Nasrallah, 140 S. Ct. at 1694).

²³ Id. at 1626 (quoting INS v. St. Cyr, 553 U.S. 289, 308 (2001)).

²⁴ See infra Question 8.

²⁵ Patel, 142 S. Ct. at 1626-27.

²⁶ Id. at 1627.

and the government.²⁷ This conclusion, based on the statute's purportedly unambiguous meaning, is remarkable in that it implicitly deems unreasonable the contrary interpretation by four dissenting judges at the Supreme Court and five at the Eleventh Circuit.

5. What circuit decisions did Patel overturn?

The Supreme Court's decision overrules the jurisdictional holdings finding review of factual determinations related to the enumerated forms of discretionary relief in at least the following cases:

- Castro v. Holder, 727 F.3d 125 (1st Cir. 2013)
- Rosario v. Holder, 627 F.3d 58 (2d Cir. 2010)
- Mendez-Moranchel v. Ashcroft, 338 F.3d 176 (3d Cir. 2003)
- Garcia-Melendez v. Ashcroft, 351 F.3d 657 (5th Cir. 2003)
- Santana-Albarran v. Ashcroft, 393 F.3d 699 (6th Cir. 2005)
- Ortiz-Cornejo v. Gonzales, 400 F.3d 610 (8th Cir. 2005)
- Mamigonian v. Biggs, 710 F.3d 936 (9th Cir. 2013)
- Arambula-Medina v. Holder, 572 F.3d 824, 828 (10th Cir. 2009).²⁸

In addition, while the Supreme Court characterized the Seventh Circuit's holding in *Cevilla v. Gonzales*²⁹ as being consistent with the Eleventh Circuit's holding in Patel,³⁰ other Seventh Circuit decisions conflict with Cevilla, and these have now been overruled by Patel.³¹

6. What impact could Patel have on the jurisdiction of Courts of Appeals over immigration petitions for review?

Patel does not affect jurisdiction over factual challenges related to asylum, withholding, or CAT raised in petitions for review.³² It also does not affect circuit court jurisdiction over legal and constitutional claims, including mixed question of law and fact, raised in petitions for review.³³ Rather, the decision strips jurisdiction over all purely factual questions in challenges to denials of the forms of relief enumerated in § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) raised in a petition for review. Such purely factual questions might include, for example:

- When a noncitizen was admitted to the United States;
- Whether a noncitizen actually has a qualifying relative for the relevant form of relief;

²⁷ Id.

²⁸ Id. at 1621 n.1.

²⁹ 446 F.3d 658 (7th Cir. 2006).

³⁰ Patel, 142 S. Ct. at 1621 n.1

³¹ See, e.g., Iddir v. INS, 301 F.3d 492, 496-498 (7th Cir. 2002); see also, Patel, 971 F.3d at 1289 (Martin, J., dissenting) (citing additional cases which now may be overruled by Patel).

³² See supra Question 1.

³³ Indeed, the majority opinion reaffirms that such legal and constitutional claims are subject to review. Patel, 142 S. Ct. at 1623.

- Whether an applicant for non-LPR cancellation has acquired the requisite continuous physical presence; and
- Whether an applicant has in fact sustained a disqualifying conviction.

As noted above in Question 3, the dissent calls into question whether Mr. Patel’s petition for review in fact raised a factual question.³⁴ Thus, practitioners are advised to review footnote 3 of the dissent when contemplating how to frame questions related to the substantial evidence standard. For more discussion of this footnote, see question 10 below.

7. What impact may Patel have on the jurisdiction of Courts of Appeals over agency denials of cancellation of removal for failure to establish the requisite hardship?

After the decision in Guerrero-Lasprilla v. Barr, in which the Supreme Court held that 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(D) encompassed mixed questions of law and fact, a number of circuits re-examined whether the hardship determination in non-LPR cancellation of removal cases involves a mixed question of law and fact and, therefore, is reviewable. The courts have reached conflicting results. Specifically, to date, the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Circuits have held that whether a noncitizen has established sufficient hardship is reviewable because it involves a mixed question of law and fact,³⁵ while the Third and Tenth Circuits have held that hardship remains a discretionary issue over which the courts lacked jurisdiction.³⁶

As of the date of this advisory, neither the Fourth, Fifth, nor Sixth Circuits have addressed in a published opinion whether Patel affects the hardship analysis.³⁷ In their pre-Patel decisions, however, all three courts found that hardship determinations in a cancellation cases are reviewable because they found the issue to involve mixed questions of law and fact. Because Patel should not impact this finding, these holdings should remain good law and the hardship determination should remain reviewable.

³⁴ Id., at 1635 n.3 (Gorsuch, J., dissenting) (noting that “whether there is substantial evidence to support a finding is a question of law”) (quoting Colo. Nat’l Bank v. Comm’r, 305 U.S. 23, 25 (1938)).

³⁵ Gonzalez Galvan v. Garland, 6 F.4th 552, 558-60 (4th Cir. 2021); Trejo v. Garland, 3 F.4th 760, 768-74 (5th Cir. 2021) Singh v. Rosen, 984 F.3d 1142, 1150-54 (6th Cir. 2021).

³⁶ Hernandez-Morales v. Att’y Gen., 977 F.3d 247, 249 (3d Cir. 2020) (finding hardship is a discretionary judgment call, not a legal question); Galeano-Romero v. Barr, 968 F.3d 1176, 1182-84 (10th Cir. 2020) (same).

³⁷ In an unpublished decision, the Sixth Circuit—discussing both Patel and Guerrero-Lasprilla—reaffirmed that the hardship determination is a mixed question of law and fact over which the court has jurisdiction. Francisco-Diego v. Garland, 2022 WL 1741657, at *2 (6th Cir. May 31, 2022). In a post-Patel published decision, the Fifth Circuit stated in dicta that Patel “likely inhibits our ability to review the IJ’s [cancellation of removal] decision.” 36 F.4th 639, 646 n.1 (5th Cir. 2022). However, because the court found that the pro se petitioner had waived his cancellation claim, there was no discussion of the issue and no way to tell from the decision whether it involved a challenge to the IJ’s hardship determination. See Trejo, 3 F.4th at 767.

Notably, whether a court has jurisdiction to review a hardship determination turns not on an interpretation of § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i), that is, the discretionary vs. non-discretionary distinction of years past, but rather on the cancellation statute at 8 U.S.C. § 1229b(b)(1) and the jurisdiction savings clause at 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(D). The salient question post-Patel is whether a particular claim raised to challenge agency decision-making is factual, and thus unreviewable, or legal (including mixed questions of law and fact), and thus reviewable.

The Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Circuit cases offer compelling reasons why hardship should be considered a mixed question of law and fact.³⁸ The Fifth Circuit, for example, pointed out that “the BIA’s own precedents treat the hardship determination as a legal one, applying de novo review and stating that a hardship determination involves the ‘application of the pertinent legal standards’ to the facts found by the immigration judge.”³⁹ The Sixth Circuit analogized the determination in cancellation cases to the “undue hardship” analysis in the bankruptcy context where the determination is treated as a mixed question of law and fact.⁴⁰ In Gonzalez Galvan, the Fourth Circuit reasoned that “[t]he statutory term ‘exceptional and extremely unusual hardship’ in Section 1229b(1)(D) does not refer to ‘hardship’ generally but specifies a precise and elevated standard that the IJ must apply to the findings of fact reflected in the record.”⁴¹

Despite repeated references in the briefing and at oral argument, Patel does not address hardship in the cancellation context.⁴² Thus, in jurisdictions where hardship has been held to be a mixed question, petitioners should argue that Patel does not undo prior case law.

In the Third and Tenth Circuits, where hardship has been held to be discretionary and unreviewable, the government is likely to argue that these decisions are consistent with Patel and that hardship determinations remain unreviewable unless the petitioner has raised a legal or constitutional claim. Accordingly, practitioners are advised to frame claims as legal or constitutional and also to contend that pre-Patel holdings based on discretionary vs. non-discretionary review need to be re-examined through the lens of § 1252(a)(2)(D).

Finally, in circuits without post-Guerrero-Lasprilla precedent decisions, practitioners should review Guerrero-Lasprilla and any prior hardship case law to craft arguments that hardship determinations involve mixed questions of law and fact, and, therefore, the court has jurisdiction to review them. In so doing, the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Circuits favorable decisions may be instructive. NILA encourages practitioners with pending petitions for review implicating

³⁸ Note, however, that not all the reasoning in these pre-Patel cases will survive. See, e.g., Gonzalez Galvan, 6 F.4th at 560 (distinguishing between the statutory eligibility requirements of cancellation—including hardship—and the ultimate decision whether to grant cancellation of removal); Trejo, 3 F.4th at 770 (defining the term “judgment” in § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) more narrowly than the Supreme Court).

³⁹ See also Singh, 984 F.3d at 1151.

⁴⁰ Singh, 984 F.3d at 1152. See also Trejo, 3 F.4th at 771-772.

⁴¹ Gonzalez Galvan, 6 F.4th at 560.

⁴² Patel only raises cancellation as an example of how the government’s reading of § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) would be applied and cites to Trejo and Singh for that proposition, but the Court does not express an opinion as to the merits of those cases. Patel, 142 S. Ct. at 1621-22.

jurisdiction over hardship determinations to flag those cases by contacting NILA at info@immigrationlitigation.org or the ACLU at cwofsy@aclu.org.

8. What impact may Patel have on district courts' jurisdiction over the denial of adjustment of status applications?

The question of a district court's jurisdiction over USCIS' denial of an adjustment of status application remains open.

Affirmative adjustment applications, including those filed by “arriving [noncitizens],”⁴³ are adjudicated by USCIS.⁴⁴ If USCIS denies an affirmative adjustment application, the applicant does not have the right to an administrative appeal,⁴⁵ even though those who are not arriving noncitizens may renew the application before an IJ if DHS files an NTA placing them in removal proceedings.⁴⁶

The lack of an administrative appeal notwithstanding, in most circuits, district courts historically have reviewed the denial of adjustment applications filed by arriving noncitizens and applicants not placed in removal proceedings. District courts review denied adjustment applications under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA), 5 U.S.C. § 701, et seq., and/or the Declaratory Judgment Act (DJA), 28 U.S.C. § 2201.⁴⁷

In briefing and argument to the Court, Mr. Patel, the government, and non-Court appointed amici (including NILA) raised the concern that a broad interpretation of § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i)—if found applicable to district courts—may be interpreted to foreclose district court review. Notably, some courts have found that the plain language of § 1252(a)(2)(D), which restores judicial review over “constitutional claims and questions of law” is limited to claims “raised upon a petition for review filed with the appropriate court of appeals.”⁴⁸

⁴³ The statute and regulations use the term “arriving alien.” Because “using the term ‘alien’ to refer to other human beings is offensive and demeaning,” Flores v. USCIS, 718 F.3d 548, 551 n.1 (6th Cir. 2013) (abrogated on other grounds by Sanchez v. Mayorkas, 141 S. Ct. 1809 (2021)), this advisory replaces this term with “arriving noncitizen.” Thus, all references to “arriving noncitizens” are references to the statutory and regulatory term “arriving aliens.”

⁴⁴ 8 C.F.R. §§ 245.2(a)(1), 1245.2(a)(1).

⁴⁵ 8 C.F.R. § 245.2(a)(5)(ii).

⁴⁶ Id.

⁴⁷ District court review is not available for cancellation of removal and voluntary departure—two other forms of relief enumerated in 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i)—because this relief is available only in removal proceedings and thus judicial review occurs through a petition for review of a final order of removal. See 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(1). District court review of USCIS denials of § 212(h) and § 212(i) waivers is more complicated because of possible bars to review found in 8 U.S.C. §§ 1182(h)(2) and 1182(i)(2). The extent to which district court review exists over such affirmative waiver denials is beyond the scope of this advisory.

⁴⁸ 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(D). See, e.g., Shabaj v. Holder, 718 F.3d 48, 51 (2d Cir. 2013) (finding that § 1252(a)(2)(D) did not apply to a challenge to USCIS' denial of a § 212(i) waiver).

Importantly, the Court expressly declined to address this issue.⁴⁹ Thus, the extent of such jurisdiction remains an open question.

9. Does Patel impact 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(ii)?

Patel was limited to addressing the scope of subsection (i) of § 1252(a)(2)(B) and thus does not impact the application of subsection (ii). Subsection (ii) bars review of “any other decision or action of the Attorney General or the Secretary of Homeland Security the authority for which is specified under this subchapter to be in the discretion of the Attorney General or the Secretary of Homeland Security, other than the granting of [asylum].” The referenced “subchapter” is 8 U.S.C. Subchapter 2, which includes, inter alia, provisions related to immigrant and nonimmigrant visas and visa petitions, inadmissibility and deportability grounds, and waivers other than those referenced in § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i). For cases in which this provision may be implicated, practitioners should research decisions of the courts of appeals in the relevant circuit to determine its applicability.

10. What steps can attorneys consider when representing clients seeking relief enumerated in 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i)?

Relief Denied in Removal Proceedings

- Highlight the lack of factual disputes in the record.

Because federal courts retain jurisdiction over legal claims, practitioners should highlight where possible that there are no factual disputes in the record. For example, practitioners could include a “Statement of Uncontroverted Facts” in their BIA brief, and, where DHS does not challenge the uncontroverted nature of the facts, state in their circuit court brief that the facts are not in dispute.

- In petitions for review, frame claims as legal or constitutional, rather than factual, whenever possible and underscore the reviewability of mixed questions of law and fact.

Because Patel does not affect circuit court jurisdiction over petitions for review that raise legal and constitutional claims or mixed questions of law and fact, practitioners should frame issues as such. Practitioners also should not assume that a particular issue is purely factual in nature. As indicated in the dissent in Patel, whether a question is truly factual is nuanced and “whether there is substantial evidence to support a finding is a question of law.”⁵⁰ Thus, an assumption that an issue is purely factual can have serious ramifications and foreclose federal court review.

⁴⁹ Patel, 142 S. Ct. at 1626. In a footnote, the Court also cited the “independent question” of whether USCIS’ denial of an adjustment application prior to initiation of removal proceedings would satisfy the threshold requirements of finality and exhaustion of administrative remedies, noting disagreement among the courts of appeals on this issue. Id. at 1626 n.3. Note, however, that, by regulation, arriving noncitizens are unable to renew their adjustment applications in removal proceedings. Consequently, there are strong arguments in their cases that USCIS’ denial should be administratively final and that there are no further administrative remedies to exhaust.

Whether the agency applied the correct legal standard or standard of review is always a legal question subject to de novo review. For example, while credibility may be a factual issue, whether the BIA correctly applied the clear error standard in reviewing an adverse credibility determination is always a question of law.⁵¹ Similarly, what actions a person took is a question of fact, but whether those actions constitute due diligence for purposes of equitable tolling is a mixed question of law and fact.⁵²

Whether a particular issue is legal, factual, or mixed can be difficult to determine, and practitioners should consult applicable circuit law. Practitioners litigating petitions for review impacted by Patel who have questions about whether an issue is legal, factual, or mixed are encouraged to contact the ACLU at cwofsy@aclu.org for further assistance.

- Consider seeking prosecutorial discretion.

DHS may exercise prosecutorial discretion at various stages of proceedings, including at the time of NTA filing, during removal proceedings, before the BIA, and even while a case is pending on a petition for review before the court of appeals. Under ICE’s April 3, 2022, prosecutorial discretion memorandum, “[a]ppellate advocacy should focus on priority cases,” and “DOJ’s Office of Immigration Litigation (OIL) will continue to assess whether cases at the petition for review (PFR) stage of appellate litigation are DHS enforcement priorities.”⁵³ In non-priority cases where the noncitizen is not detained, “OIL generally will work with the noncitizen to make the appropriate motion to the circuit court to close the case.”⁵⁴

- Consider administrative remedies, such as motions to reopen, remand, or reconsider.

If a case is on appeal before the BIA or on petition for review with a circuit court, practitioners may consider whether it is appropriate to file motions to reopen, remand, or reconsider and ⁵⁰ Id. at 1635 n.3 (Gorsuch, J., dissenting) (quoting Colo. Nat’l Bank v. Comm’r, 305 U.S. 23, 25 (1938)).

⁵¹ Whether the Board applied the wrong standard of review is a legal question, regardless of whether the underlying issue is factual or legal in nature. See, e.g., Rosales Justo v. Sessions, 895 F.3d 154, 161 (9th Cir. 2018) (stating that the BIA’s determination that the IJ clearly erred “is not . . . an ‘administrative finding of fact’ subject to the substantial evidence standard . . . but a legal determination” subject to de novo review).

⁵² See Guerrero-Lasprilla, 140 S. Ct. 1062.

⁵³ U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, Guidance to OPLA Attorneys Regarding the Enforcement of Civil Immigration Laws and the Exercise of Prosecutorial Discretion, 14 & n.32 (Apr. 3, 2022), https://www.ice.gov/doclib/about/offices/opla/OPLA-immigration-enforcement_guidanceApr2022.pdf.

⁵⁴ Id. at 14 n.32.

request that DHS join in the motion.⁵⁵

Applications Denied by USCIS

- Consider seeking administrative remedies, such as motions to reopen or reconsider, and review by the Administrative Appeals Office (AAO).

An applicant can obtain three of the forms of relief enumerated in § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i)—§ 212(h) and § 212(i) and adjustment of status—from USCIS outside of removal proceedings. Given the open question of whether district courts have jurisdiction to review these decisions, practitioners should consider all possible administrative options prior to filing a district court case. Such relief includes filing a motion to reopen to supplement the record with additional evidence or a motion to reconsider demonstrating a legal or factual error in the underlying decision.⁵⁶

Additionally, a denial of a waiver under either § 1182(h) or § 1182(i) can be appealed to the Administrative Appeals Office.⁵⁷ There is no administrative appeal of a denial of adjustment of status.⁵⁸ However, a USCIS officer may certify an adjustment decision to the AAO for further review.⁵⁹ Generally, this happens in cases in which “an unusually complex or novel issue of law or fact” is raised.⁶⁰ While the regulations permit only a USCIS officer, and not the applicant, to certify a decision, practitioners may be able to advocate for the director of the USCIS field office which issued the denial to certify the decision to the AAO.

- District Court Review

The impact of § 1252(a)(2)(B)(i) on a district court’s jurisdiction over USCIS’ denial of an adjustment of status application is a complex and evolving question. Practitioners who have pending district court cases challenging adjustment of status denials or who are contemplating such district court litigation are encouraged to contact NILA at info@immigrationlitigation.org for further assistance.

⁵⁵ Id. at 14-15. For more information on the filing of motions to reopen, practitioners should consult National Immigration Litigation Alliance and American Immigration Council, The Basics of Motions to Reopen EOIR-Issued Removal Orders (Apr. 25, 2022), <https://immigrationlitigation.org/wp-content/uploads/2022/04/MTR-Updated-FINAL.pdf>.

⁵⁶ See 8 C.F.R. § 103.5(a)(2), (3).

⁵⁷ Both waivers are filed on Form I-601, instructions for which are available at <https://www.uscis.gov/sites/default/files/document/forms/i-601instr.pdf>. The AAO has jurisdiction over denials of waiver requests filed on Form I-601. See <https://www.uscis.gov/about-us/organization/directorates-and-program-offices/the-administrative-appeals-office-ao>; see also 8 C.F.R. § 103.3.

⁵⁸ 8 C.F.R. § 245.2(a)(5)(ii).

⁵⁹ 8 C.F.R. § 103.4(a).

⁶⁰ 8 C.F.R. § 103.4(a)(1).